

An Orderly New Year

WELCOME TO YOUR New Year's resolutions. Talk about the party being over.

If one of the reasons you came out of the closet is because you got lost in yours, Scott Roewer is someone you want to talk to. His company, Solutions-by-Scott has been helping Washington, D.C., professionals get organized for years.

"Everyone deserves a life that works better," says Roewer. "Effective people can't afford to be disorganized. Losing things consistently, paying bills late, and running behind on appointments — these things cost us in time, money and reputation — and they are avoidable!"

And the situation people find themselves in is more common than many people think — and often simpler to understand and resolve. According to Roewer, "disorganization is simply delayed decisions. We help clear a path through the layers of old decisions." And these decisions can involve paperwork, closets, drawers, households in general, offices and schedules. The complications of the life we build often get in our way."

Solutions-by-Scott uses proven, proprietary organizational techniques that are customized to each client and can be adapted to a wide range of lifestyles, professions, and problem areas.

"Most of my clients find it quite cathartic. A psychological cleansing and breakthrough seems to take place after we get things under control that carries with them long after I've finished my job. It's very rewarding for everyone."

For those who think that engaging a professional organizer might be cost prohibitive, consider Scott Roewer's observations on organization as either the next hot new trend or one of the best-kept secrets in civilized society: "Organized people earn more money and accomplish more by wasting less time. They are more likely to be promoted on the job." He cites as further proof that in the D.C.-metro area, uncluttered homes sell better.

Solutions-by-Scott creates customized organizing solutions that are simple to use and easy to maintain. Scott Roewer personally works side-by-side with his clients and has successfully gone through the piles of papers, bills and receipts, garages, attics, kitchen cabinets and the boxes that were never unpacked from the last move. He also provides consultation services for individuals who may want an organization plan they can work on by themselves. Solutions-by-Scott even offers an emergency service for those who need a quick "organization make-over."

Roewer also makes it easy for clients to access his competitively priced services, with flexible appointments offered seven days a week.

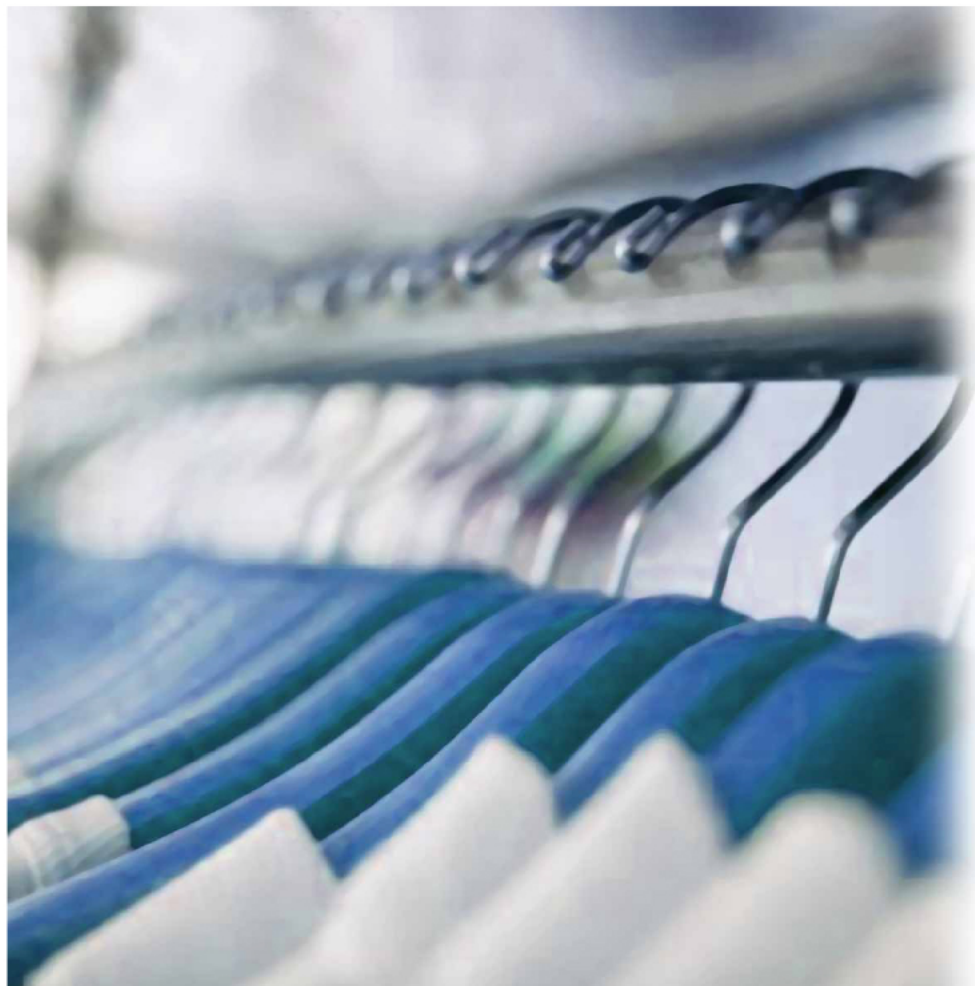

For those of you who think professional organizers walk in armed with only a label maker and trash bags, the extent and pedigree of the profession may surprise you. Not only is Scott Roewer a member of the National Association of Professional Organizers (NAPO) and serves locally on the board of directors for NAPO's DC-Metro Chapter. He is also an active member of the National Study Group on Chronic Disorganization and holds a master's degree in education — background he finds very helpful in effectively communicating and "teaching" the process he is creating for each client.

Think of a professional organizer as a personal trainer for your living and professional space. Whether your closet needs to be re-worked, or your home needs a complete overhaul, Solutions-by-Scott can help.
